

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD

By Jan Collins

A farmer's family had gone to church and left him all alone
Their love for him was very strong, but his beliefs they could not condone.

He sat in his chair as he watched the flickering fire,
Thinking of his dreams in life- and wondering what WAS his heart's desire.

He saw the world as nature, creation all around
But on the ways of God, his mind could not expound.

Mysteriously a sound was made outside in the dark of night

A bird had lost its way, confusion was its plight.

He hurried to the barn and lit a lantern there
He had in mind this little one and its life to spare.

'If I were only a bird myself, I'd guide him down to earth,
Toward this light, this bird's only hope- EACH creature has SOME worth',

And just as if a light came on, in his mortal mind
He realized what God had done for all of His mankind.

God came to earth a man himself, as a babe- a beautiful sight-
He came to earth to show men the way toward His precious Light!
